

In general, assets acquired before the marriage are non-marital property and stay with the original owner. However, in certain situations, assets acquired before the marriage may become marital property and are then subject to being divided by a court.